Coaching is no longer reserved for sports teams. Today, people are looking for excellence and turning to coaches to improve their health, their career and their finances. A coach can see what a client cannot. Just like fitness coaches hold their clients accountable for their diets and exercise, finance coaches hold their clients accountable to sound financial management, providing them the guidance, support and motivation needed to reach their financial goals.

Financial coaching is a promising strategy to help people improve their financial well-being. Practitioners are turning to coaching strategies to better facilitate behavior change as opposed to the disappointing results often found when only financial education or financial access programs are introduced.

WHAT IS FINANCIAL COACHING?
Financial coaching is an application of techniques emerging from research in positive psychology. Coaching methods have been applied in areas such as physical and mental healthcare, management and career planning. A key assumption in financial coaching is that a client is creative and resourceful yet may need assistance in tapping into those positive attributes. Typically a coach works with a client to zero in on a behavior or behaviors to improve upon. The focus is on performance gains driven by the goals of the client. Unlike a counselor who helps solve problems, the coach provides a structure for clients to develop their own solutions. In the long run, coaching helps people develop skills and behaviors they can improve upon independently.

FUNDERS’ OPPORTUNITY TO INVEST IN FINANCIAL COACHING AS AN ASSET BUILDING STRATEGY
Financial coaching is a growing area and one of great interest in the asset building field. It shows promise in helping people build financial capability and assets by learning to set financial goals, adhering to their goals with oversight and monitoring and gaining confidence to problem solve.

Funders are essential in helping meet the emerging needs of this new field. Grantmaking opportunities for funders include:

- Convening practitioners to learn about the approach
- Supporting regional trainings
- Setting and promoting standards for financial coaching
- Funding coaches and coaching programs
- Collaborating on evaluation efforts

3 KEY ROLES OF A COACH

1. EMPOWER CLIENT TO SET OWN GOAL
   - Implementation intentions

2. HOLD CLIENT ACCOUNTABLE
   - External monitor
   - Practice self-control

3. FOCUS ATTENTION ON BEHAVIOR
   - Maintenance and feedback
THE COACHING DIFFERENCE

Financial coaching is simply an application of coaching techniques designed to develop a client’s capability to manage their own finances and sustain economic security in accordance with their self-defined goals. The coach helps the client set goals, define the short- and intermediate-term steps to achieve the goals, form specific intentions to implement steps toward those goals and then monitors the client and provides feedback on performance. Unlike a counseling model, the coach does not have to be an expert on financial issues, but does need to have skills in active listening, motivational interviewing and performance monitoring.

The figure below shows the comparison between financial coaching, financial counseling and financial planning. Each has a specific function for participants, but different roles in terms of length of service, service delivery process, techniques and content. Any one client may need counseling or planning assistance at various points in their financial lives. Coaching is another, complementary approach, used to help clients develop their ability to achieve their financial goals.

*Stable: a person who is not struggling with critical financial issues, but is interested in making improvements to his or her financial situation.

*In Crisis: a person who is facing social, physical, mental or financial problems that require direct counseling and intervention due to the severity of their situation.

EVOLUTION IN THE FIELD

An emerging practice among some coaching programs is to combine financial coaching with additional services—such as financial counseling, financial education, or financial planning. Because people’s financial lives are complex, they may require a combination of services. For example, a client who is working with a financial coach to achieve their goal to buy a car, may also need to improve their credit in order to be approved for a car loan. Providing financial coaching and financial counseling enables the client to receive coaching services of goal setting and accountability support, along with counseling services to improve their credit. This “hybrid” approach responds to the unique context and situation of the client and provides maximum benefit. Recognizing the need for a hybrid approach, some financial coaching programs train coaches in multiple approaches, such as coaching and counseling techniques. Savvy coaches recognize when their client may benefit from a hybrid approach and are expected to be transparent with the client and let them know when they are operating in a role other than as a financial coach.
